Patients with Crohn's disease (CD) have been reported to have a higher risk of fractures than the general population, but there are inconsistent results concerning the prevalence of fractures in patients with CD. The aim of this study was to investigate the risk of fractures in patients with CD by performing a meta-analysis. A systematic search was carried out using PubMed, Cochrane Library, and EMBASE databases to identify the relevant studies. After screening, 13 retrospective cohort studies involving 14,046 patients with CD and 171,906 controls were included in the meta-analysis. The pooled relative risks (RRs) and 95% confidence intervals (CIs) of fracture were calculated using the random-effects model. The pooled RRs were 1.34 (95% CI, 1.16-1.54) for any fracture, 1.74 (95% CI, 1.18-2.56) for major fracture, and 1.61 (95% CI, 1.23-2.10) for any fractures in patients with CD, compared with the control subjects. The pooled RR for any fracture was higher in CD patients with inflamed bowel than those without (RR, 1.67; 95% CI, 1.45-1.90). Patients with CD who had corticosteroid use were more likely to have any fracture than those without (RR, 2.54; 95% CI, 1.77-3.61). Moreover, the pooled RRs for any fracture were significantly higher in CD patients with disease duration longer than 5 years than in those with disease duration shorter than 5 years (RR, 1.36; 95% CI, 1.18-1.56). This study suggests that patients with CD have a higher risk of fractures, especially of those that occurred in inflamed bowel. thePadding = thePadding + thePaddingDigit + thePaddingUnsignedDigit; case 'd':
