I'll keep it short and to the point today because this is an exciting week! Updates Links Links! Links! The previous sub-project: Dynamic Typing Congratulations to Ashkan and Josh on submitting their OPAM review! Congratulations to Dap and Jac on submitting their OPAM review! The OPAM September CMM weekly post is out! If you are following along with the campaign, you'll want to check out the latest content. I'll keep it short and to the point today because this is an exciting week! New Sub-Project All of you have probably spotted in the highlights that there is a new sub-project at OPAM this month! On behalf of everyone on the committee, I'd like to welcome the Dynamic Typing project to the OPAM family! Dynamic Typing is a mini project I've been tinkering with for a while now. I've been wanting to add a dynamic typing capability to OPAM's process for generating all of the documentation for the toolchain. This includes the documentation for libopam, and the documentation for the packages that have been built from libopam. This sub-project is my first experiment in using OPAM's toolchain process to generate documentation. Links Links! Links! It's hard to believe that it's September already! With that said, the CMM (Community Mentoring Month) is in full swing! If you're feeling stuck, there's still time to get involved in the CMM. We're in week 5! Don't worry. There aren't any big changes, but there are a few things that you might want to be aware of! Not Sure What to Do? If you're new to mentoring, and you

What's New in the Photoshop?

Gov. Gregoire promotes education to Washington's youngest Promoting a key piece of the Legislature's education plan, Gov. Chris Gregoire promoted computer science as a career choice to more than 600 sixth-, seventh- and eighth-graders at Arnold Middle School on Monday. "Computer science is the new manufacturing," she said. "We need more people to think about it as a career choice." The governor, along with state school Superintendent Tony Evers, was joined by representatives of Microsoft, Intel and other software companies to pitch the career to the students. Greek and Portuguese migrants in Ireland are doing less well than their Irish counterparts, a new report reveals. The study, carried out by the Economic and Social Research Institute, finds that even though the majority of these migrants are holding down well-paid jobs, many are struggling to meet their basic needs. The study, examining the social needs of both Irish-born and foreign born persons over the age of 15, uses data from the 2011 Census and other national sources. Last year, over 50 per cent of the population said they were working. However, of those currently working, less than one-third were employed for regular hours. According to the study, a further 29 per cent were working part-time. The data show that 7 per cent were living in public housing. Another 13 per cent were on the waiting list. The study further found that over three-quarters of the foreign born population were in the public sector. Thirty per cent of this group were employees and another 22 per cent were self-employed. Of those in the employment category, 43 per cent were in skilled jobs and another 30 per cent in semi-skilled positions. Poverty rates The study found that the gap in both the poverty rates of the Irish and migrant populations has increased considerably. Six per cent of the population is now in poverty. This is the first time the rate has been above the 5 per cent mark since the 1980s. The study further states that the poverty rate for the migrants has increased from 9 per cent in 2004 to 13 per cent in 2011. Over half of the migrants to Ireland are from Portugal, followed by Greece and Poland. The study found that the average household earnings for Irish-born persons are more than €38,000. However, this figure has fallen for foreign born persons to just over €19
