The first reason is the size of the main orifice of the 12-mm IMA. After identification of the site of the main orifice of the IMA, it was necessary to fill the lung with saline until no bubbles appeared in the pleural cavity to prevent air leakage at the orifice. Therefore, the relatively large size of the main orifice of the IMA limited the number of times we could perform this technique. A second reason for the difference in the prevalence of intraoperative air leak after the 2 strategies is the placement of the 12-mm IMA. The IMA is placed at the level of the anterior bronchial tree at the carina, avoiding the injury of the distal branches of the right bronchus \[[@b7-anntransplant-23-179]\]. In the approach of the 12-mm IMA by using the TLC technique, the position of the IMA did not affect the surgical field, and the IMA was directly sutured to the LAVPLA. In the TAP technique, in contrast, the IMA was rotated several degrees to avoid the distal orifice of the IMA. The third reason is that the percentage of 30% to 40% airway compression by the lung and 11% blood volume of the lung and patient-specific morphologic characteristic of the TLC could be a reason for the difference of the prevalence of air leakage after the two strategies \[[@b14-anntransplant-23-179],[@b15-anntransplant-23-179]\]. The final and fourth reason is that the technique of suturing the IMA did not improve the stability of the IMA during the procedure because the width of the IMA was greater than the LAVPLA (Figure 2{ref-type="fig"}). Conclusions ===== In conclusion, the TLC technique is a more effective technique for suture of a 12-mm IMA in lung transplantation, because it provides better intraoperative stability of the IMA and also reduces air leakage. Source d0c515b9f4

The primary goal of the Academy is to provide a cost effective, low stress, and convenient online learning experience that will allow our students to develop the skills required to function successfully in the rapidly changing world of today. To accomplish this, we have established a flexible structure that blends online courses and instructor-led face-to-face instruction. Through a combination of eLearning activities, online course work, on-site programs, and self-paced learning, our online students benefit from the same educational opportunities as our traditional on-site students. Saturday, 30 September 2016 Our last trip to Argentina was for a festival at San Borja, designed by the Argentine artist Amilcare Ponchet. The exhibition is about connections; the idea of telepathy, direct communication and communicating with beings from other worlds. In the work 'The Atauroceur' the sculptor has buried a magnificent big tongue in the ground, leaving it to rest in peace. 'Who is it?', asked the audience. 'It's a mosquito', replied the artist, but the same artist had always been fascinated by the idea of the insect as an intermediary between the human and the cosmos. We are only a very small part of the universe. The celebration of life on earth is a very short experience compared with how long the universe has existed. We exist in a galaxy that is moving among billions of other galaxies in a cosmic time that is more than 12 billion years long. Friday, 29 September 2016 This week, in the cafe of San Antonio de Areco, Domi, a young artist from Argentina, gave us a first show of his sculpture 'Las Nebulae', a project which refers to another mysterious work of nature. We talked about the difference between heaven and the heavens and the nature of the universe. It was a dialogue between an artist who has been working in galleries and a real scientist who was interested in outer space. "Stem cell" is a term used to refer to any of various types of

Why? Because there is nothing wrong with Microsoft's products. We just don't want one company owning the lion's share of everything (especially if that one company is evil). Sure, they'll probably not be able to sell any of their products or get internet service at all if they don't get the deal... but gee, did that idea ever sound a bit sinister???

According to Microsoft, the deal includes "licensing, accreditations, certifications and other government certifications" (natch). In addition, sources say that the agreement would see Microsoft continue to provide key security services, updates, support and services for Skype, OneDrive, Office365 and Azure. It's a nice touch that Microsoft is promising all of the updates as well as support for the current version of the Windows operating system, Windows Server, Windows Phone and Xbox while the deal is on. Many of you are probably thinking "Well, hell. Not another billion dollar company." True. But many of you (myself included) are also thinking, "What about that Amazon guy?" Again, true, and I have a few thoughts on that, too. From what I can tell, Amazon does have many good points when it comes to many aspects of the tech industry. It does provide a fast and easy service when it comes to shopping online. It also has a solid Android and Kindle ecosystem. But Amazon is an evil empire and is in the process of completing its planned takeover of the food industry. Still, Amazon Prime is a good value, and I do enjoy my free two-day shipping services. "But, Clay." And I am right there with you. I remember being excited when Amazon announced its original shows, and then when it announced its Kindle Fire tablet and Fire TV products. It all sounded good to me. Like Amazon was stepping forward in the industry with a great product and good ideas. Unfortunately, it hasn't been that way. Amazon built and continues to build the world's largest e-commerce company. However, it is rumored that Amazon has entered into a joint venture with the Chinese company, Tencent. That said, Alexa and Dash are non-existent in the Chinese

Amazon app. Kindle seems to have been completely ignored by Tencent. There are rumors of Amazon attempting to get approval for the Fire TV and Kindle TV in China, but that might be wishful thinking. The good news is that Amazon Prime is, and continues to be, a great value service that almost every tech-sav
