Anthem – CANTO 3.0 “If your faith is as strong as your devotion to God, then how can it be doubted?” Can Congress fix ObamaCare? It seems like an impossible task, yet the administration has announced that they plan on submitting some sort of fix for the current set of regulations by year-end. A 7th Circuit Court decision has shown some evidence that the Department of Justice is siding with the plaintiffs on this issue. The administration has a few months to come up with something to fix the insurance markets, or else the penalty provisions will go into effect in 2014. Read more here. The full text of President Obama’s speech at the 2015 State of the Union can be viewed here. The most interesting passage may be in Section 11, in which he makes a reference to the Jewish year of repentance, 5779, which ends this past Saturday. In addition to the black list, the Department of Labor will be announcing a program that will “proactively” go out to employers, giving them a chance to resolve the problem before they are kicked off the rolls. This is apparently to be something like the stimulus program, with a small “stimulus” on the back end. The question that gets me about this is this: How long are the Department of Labor going to keep searching for some problem and pointing it out to employers? Is it really necessary to pay these fines for
