“Our statisticians and developers have used data from live matches to more accurately recreate the feel of the best soccer matches,” said Aaron McHardy, FIFA Director of Live Services. “The new ways players engage with the ball and react to the competition allows for a faster and more accurate gameplay. It’s a more realistic experience – especially for avid fans – and they will be able to feel the emotion of the sport as never before.” “FIFA is pushing forward with its capabilities by bringing the hyper-powered ‘HyperMotion’ technology to the game, which will make the football feel like never before,” said FIFA Producer Jürgen Fitschen. “The authenticity of what is real and true in real life is what we strive for and HyperMotion technology allows us to do that even better.” The new-and-improved game engine, which was first demonstrated at EA Play 2016, also uses Dynamic 3D Goal Scoring to dynamically score goals scored from different angles by using player motion, contact with the ball and player attributes. Goals are scored even from penalties if the goalkeeper makes contact with the ball or the kicker is positioned incorrectly. Additional innovations for improved ball control include a new Dribble Control System for better dribbling and ball control, improved Radar Accurate Passing for better tracking of passes and shots and improved controls for the new Ball Physics. “The ball physics are something that we’ve been developing for quite a while,” said Maxis Creative Lead Luke Smith. “We are constantly monitoring player performance. A common complaint is that the ball is too hard to control – because we have improved the ball physics, you’ll feel more in control than ever before. As you run with the ball, you’ll feel like a true soccer player.” In a Fifa 22 Full Crack gameplay sequence, watch the ball in FIFA as it hits the ground, simulates a bounce, then rolls down the pitch and a player runs into it, and has even run through it. These are all features enabled by the improved ball physics. To ensure the most accurate and true-to-life gameplay, fans can expect FIFA to include more players on the pitch, more post-processing effects and advanced physics. There will also be over 25 new stadiums for teams to play in, dynamic weather effects and new stadium features. For
