Jordan Daly was with his father earlier this month when a stranger approached the side of their truck and asked them to stop. The man told them that he had run out of gas. "At first I was a little skeptical," said Daly. "I thought that he was probably trying to fake us out in a way that he could rob us or something." The 24-year-old started looking into the man and later found the registration for the van, which was registered to a 3-month-old baby. "I looked in the van and I noticed there was a book in there," said Daly. "I noticed that it was called 'How to Lie to Children' and it contained information on how to lie to children." For a month, the father kept the book and taught his children about lying, but the van was still parked in the driveway of the Daly home. "I felt weird when it came back," said Daly. "I was like, 'Oh, my God, this man still just had our truck.'" After calling police, he was tracked down and was arrested on Saturday night. The district attorney is now charging him with three counts of child endangerment. Acute insulin response following a
