But when I first looked at the movie trailers, I was pretty upset with the casting decisions. The first trailer had me tearing my hair out. It's amazing how negative thinking can be self-fulfilling. A day or two after the trailer debuted online, the inevitable backlash began. There were some writers and bloggers who assured their readers that no one in the world could match the chemistry that Andrew Garfield and Emma Stone would have together in the movie. This was shocking to me, because I had seen the trailer and thought that I could see the chemistry between the two actors already. But many people apparently saw it in the same way. I love Andrew Garfield's work. His amazing performance as Peter Parker in the last 2 Peter Parker movies was one of the highlights of my life in the cinema. I can see why people give him fawning praise for a movie as a whole. He has charisma, he's very talented, and he has his own style that is recognisably his. But this film really seems to show that he has more to offer than just his usual acting style. I just hate the idea of anyone trying to supplant Tobey Maguire and explain the character that he had. Maguire had his own charm, and the wit that made the character so endearing. It would be like trying to replace Mickey Mouse with new voice actors, and hoping to walk away with the same level of success. And I have to say that the casting decisions for Gwen Stacy made me pretty worried. The process of selecting the new Gwen Stacy began with director Marc Webb and Emma Stone's mother, however, she had a very specific vision of what she wanted for Gwen's character. So Marc Webb decided to go with the character that Stone's mom
